

Lev Lalev

I leave many of my things just lying on my floor; I take my things for granted. My parents, in order to teach me a lesson about not taking things for granted, have collected the things that lie around on my floor, and told me that in order to get them back I must donate 5% of the value to a charity, to help kids who only dream about having the nice things that I do.

There are kids in the world that would do practically anything for what I leave lying around. When I lose something, or it breaks, I simply go and buy a new one. I don't pay attention to the value of money.

Many Jewish children aren't as fortunate as I am, and it is important for me to learn the value of money. What I treat like trash, they'd treat like a treasure. Donating money to Lev Lalev can lead me to understanding the value of the things that I am fortunate enough to own. I should not take all these amazing things for granted. It is also important to give to my community, to help these kids have a better future.

Together all of the things lying on my floor would equal about $560 I can't believe that this is what I take for granted. I am enclosing my donation of $28.00, which I know will go to help the children at Lev Lalev have more opportunities, and this will make me appreciate the ones I have.

Thank you,

Sheina Goldman
